Bacteria can linger on airplane surfaces for days

Disease-causing bacteria can linger on surfaces commonly found in airplane cabins for days, even up to a week, according to research presented at the annual meeting of the American Society for Microbiology.

"Many air travelers are concerned about the risks of catching a disease from other passengers given the long time spent in crowded air cabins," says Kiril Vaglenov, of Auburn University who presented the data. "This report describes the results of our first step in investigating this potential problem."

In order for disease-causing bacteria to be transmitted from a cabin surface to a person, it must survive the environmental conditions in the airplane. In the study Vaglenov and his colleagues tested the ability of two pathogens, methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) and E. coli O157:H7 to survive on surfaces commonly found in airplanes. They obtained six different types of material from a major airline carrier (armrest, plastic tray table, metal toilet button, window shade, seat pocket cloth, and leather), inoculated them with the bacteria and exposed them to typical airplane conditions.

LIFESTYLE CHOICES' ALSO ATTRACT FLYERS.

Fiblon Future Concepts designed two different and easily implementable themes for consumers that make leisure time comforts a part of the flight trip. The themes are super sports moments in the sky and the travel as an enjoyable spa experience. The contents of both concepts can be easily implemented by reshaping basic services and using Fiblon's high-quality fibre-based products.

THE SKY CAN BE COMFORTABLE

SPORT // Superbowl, Formula 1, Champions League, ice hockey... Results service, good old-fashioned food and a beer – could the return flight be any better?

THE SKY CAN BE RELAXING

SPA // Relaxation, healthy food and drinks, and light and oxygen therapy with relaxing music, for example make flying enjoyable.

Our Fiblon Future Concepts Team at your service!
